this comprehensive study of state failure upholds that the collapse of states in sub saharan africa is a self inflicted problem caused by the abandonment of the principle of effectiveness during decolonization on the one hand the abandonment of effectiveness may have facilitated the recognition of the new african states but on the other it did lead to the creation of states that were essentially powerless some of which became utter failures written in a style both provocative and unorthodox and using convincing arguments this study casts doubt on some of the most sacred principles of the modern doctrine of international law it establishes that the declaratory theory of recognition cannot satisfactorily explain the continuing existence of failed states it also demonstrates that the principled assertion of the right to self determination as the basis for independence in africa has turned the notion of sovereignty into a formal legal figment without substance this book is a plea for more realism in international law pensive pessimists in the tradition of hobbes will probably love it idealists in the tradition of grotius may hate it but they will find it very difficult to reject its conclusions this book presents a critical view of international law as an argumentative practice that aims to depoliticise international relations drawing from a range of materials koskenniemi demonstrates how international law becomes vulnerable to the contrasting criticisms of being either an irrelevant moralist utopia or a manipulable façade for state interests he examines the conflicts inherent in international law sources sovereignty custom and world order and shows how legal discourse about such subjects can be described in terms of a small number of argumentative rules this book was originally published in english in finland in 1989 and though it quickly became a classic it has been out of print for some years in 2006 cambridge was proud to reissue this seminal text together with a freshly written epilogue in which the author both responds to critiques of the original work and reflects on the effect and significance of his deconstructive approach today the definitive work in d i research now completely updated and expanded the application of scientific research to the creation of evidence based policies is a science unto itself and one that is never easy dissemination and implementation research d i is the study of how scientific advances can be implemented into everyday life and understanding how it works has never been more important for students and professionals across the scientific academic and governmental communities dissemination and implementation research in health is a practical guide to making research more consequential a collection assembled and written by today s leading d i researchers readers of this book are taught to evaluate the evidence base in an effective intervention choose a strategy that produces the greatest impact design an appropriate and effectual study track essential outcomes account for the barriers to uptake in communities social service agencies and health care facilities the challenges to moving research into practice are universal and they re complicated by the current landscape s reliance on partnerships and multi center research in this light dissemination and implementation research in health is nothing less than a roadmap to effecting change in the sciences it will have broad utility to researchers and practitioners in epidemiology biostatistics behavioral science economics medicine social work psychology and anthropology both today and in our slightly better future wildlife habitat modeling is increasingly important for managers who need to assess the effects of land management activities we evaluated the performance of a spatially explicit deterministic habitat model arc habcap that predicts habitat effectiveness for elk we used five years of radio telemetry locations of elk from custer state park csp south dakota to test predicted habitat effectiveness by the model arc habcap forage and cover forage proximity components predicted elk distribution in csp however the cover component failed to predict elk distribution in csp habitat effectiveness calculated as the geometric mean of the model components failed to predict elk distribution and resulted in under utilization of habitats predicted to be good and over utilization of habitats predicted to be poor we developed a new formula to calculate habitat effectiveness as an arithmetic average of the model components that weighted forage more than cover or cover forage proximity the new formula predicted actual elk distribution across categories of habitat effectiveness elk selected cover and forage areas 100 m from cover forage edges arc habcap predicted that areas adjacent to roads were not usable by elk elk used areas adjacent to primary roads but use was less than the proportional area comprised for primary roads and about equal to proportional area adjacent to secondary roads and primitive roads all sapling pole and mature structural stages of ponderosa pine pinus ponderosa were considered as both forage and cover by arc habcap and consequently considered optimal in the cover forage model component we suggested revisions for both the cover forage proximity component and areas adjacent to roads
